The effects of alcohol upon the physical ays tem were elaborately treated in a truly ecientific manner, and yet so explained as to be folerably well understood by his auditors. The farts states on this branch of the subject were highly intercating, and the destructive tavages of intoxication as revealed by various diseases and disrouse were quite appalling. The Rev. lecturer has received the bearfit of a medical education, and brought all his whowledge and experience to bear with great power upon this point.

His notice of Pather Mathew, the great apos tle of temperance, was a fine specimens of time passioned eloquence. He noticed with high commendations the efforts and influences of the temperance societies that have existed for years, and that so readily sympathised with the temperance movement in Ireland. He would have all go forth in manly effort until the moneter into uperance shall be desiroyed, and man made land where the frees were blown down. -Our

- sugdedines erator to at-a of the cause of intemperance, gambling and other vices, which in this country he thought to be the early age at which our youth assume the responsibilities of life- the rush that is made by sons and daughters to tie up their little bundle and go into the world beyond parental control or advice. He angrested a variety of reiliedies for this and other causes but he considered religion to be the grand fundamental remedy for all the evils ex-Leting in society. -

He contrasted the stern merality, and the industrious and economical habits of the venerable founders of our republican government with the love of idleness and luxury in their descendants; and appeald to all to rouse up and join in an intellectual and moral enterprize that should show to the world what a republic can do-

About an hour and a half was occupied in the delivery of the leature and a portion of the time the Rev. Ur. spoke with great rapidity. Our Taketch affords but a faint idea of the lecture, as our limits will only admit of a brief notice of the topics of the most general inferest.

Af The Phremological lecture at the new Court House on Saturday evening, by Mr. Purkett was well attended, and the eloquent lecturer was listened to with the deepest interest,-The lecturer presented in a happy manner the leading features of the science, its superiority ower all preceding systems of mental philosophy, and the importance of its being generally atudied and understood by the community. .. At the close of the lecture, Mr. Pons exactined the heads of two of our citizens. We certalfily mean no disrespect to the individuals examined when we say that their peculiar characteristics or tendencies were not generally known to the audience, nor were their organizations of more, a week ago last Sunday, after an eloquent a sufficiently narked character to stand out in 1800:088 bold relief so singular before the community A so so sort of a head is not a suitable one for a public e-regination: For the interest of the thing the heads examined should be of persons who are varied in character. The best and the porat the eccentric and odd, so that the audience generally would see at a glance that a good bit was made, or that it resulted in a failure. "

The next lecture will be delivered this even ing at the City Hall. The subject is announce ed in their notice in another column

NAVAL APPRENTICES.

It is well khoun that apprentices are taken into the Navy of the United States, where they receive wages, and ... hate it is understood that they shall be taught reading, Writing, arithmetio, averation and seamsnohip, and fully fitted to take command of inerchantmen if they choose to leave the Navy, or be promoted if they continue in the Navy and are worthy."

We are forced to the conviction that the inleptions of the Government, from some cause or other, has not generally been carried out, from the want of teaphers, books, and suitable apperatus. This we regret, as the plan of admitting apprentices to the Navy has always apstared to us an excellent one. In some cases saitable achoole-may have been established, but the failure in some cases tends to throw doubt upon the whole. We trust the attention of the Secretary of the Navy may be dissend to this matter, that the vessels in the Navy only be furnished nith suitable books and teachers, and were promised them before enlist cent.

The line of duty and interest is now so broad and beight that we should suppose every man of common repacity who indulges in only an occasional glass would immediately abstain and join the great cold water army, help on the cause, and share the honors of the victory:

A general impression has prevailed that we had little or no oak upon the Penouscet this asppens to be a great mistake.

fig We are happy to learn that it is quite certain now that most of the doys cut upon the west branch of the Penobscot will soon arrive at the mills.

One of the reasons given to the 1 egislature for the necessity of the Seboomook Sluice was, that the logs from the west branch could not be run to the mills the first season. We take it that argument has now lost its force.

In many towns and cities in the country the approaching anniversary of the Faurth of July is to be celebrated on strictly temperance principles. Why cannot our temperance friends get up a rousing temperance celebration in this city. There scents to be nothing to prevent, and if the Washingtonians will only start it there can be no mistake about its going ahead
